DAVID TYLER:

Being able to give back to organizations like Find Your Anchor really makes a difference in a couple of key ways. The first is we have a stated goal of making business more personal, and this certainly does that because suicide has touched most of us in a very deeply and personal way. Me specifically, and virtually every client executive that we talk about Find Your Anchor with, has some story where they've been touched by this.

DAVID TYLER:

As someone who's lost a family member to suicide, the Find Your Anchor program gives me a way to think about that differently, to find a way to give people hope and ultimately give their family members hope that there is a different answer, that you're needed and that you're loved. And that is part of what makes Grant Thornton special.

DAVID TYLER:

One of the great things that I see about our Purple Paladin program and Find Your Anchor specifically is that we find a way to matter deeply beyond the content of what we provide from a from a business professional services perspective. Our finance leaders get to see Grant Thornton in a slightly different light, as somebody that truly cares about the community. And I love the opportunity to put my money where my mouth is and invest in our communities and our people differently.
